

1
2
3
4 UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
5 DISTRICT OF NEVADA

6 * * *

7 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

8 Plaintiff,

9 v.

10 LEONARD JONES,

11 Defendant.

Case No. 2:14-cr-0344-KJD-PAL
2:16-cv-1396-KJD

ORDER

12 Presently before the Court is Petitioner Leonard Jones's Motion to Vacate, Set Aside, or 13 Correct Sentence under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 (#42/44/64). The Government filed responses in 14 opposition and supplements (#48/54/66) to which Petitioner replied (#50/60/67).

15 I. Background

16 Jones pled guilty to a single count of carrying and use of a firearm during and in relation 17 to a crime of violence under 18 U.S.C. § 924(c), specifically the interference with commerce by 18 robbery ("Hobbs Act Robbery") charged in Count Three of the indictment. This Court sentenced 19 Jones to 120 months of imprisonment, to be served consecutively to a state court sentence, 20 followed by five years of supervised release. In the instant motion, Jones moves to vacate his § 21 924(c) conviction and sentence pursuant to Johnson v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2551 (2015) and 22 United States v. Davis, 139 S. Ct. 2319, 2336 (2019) , and requests that the court vacate his 23 conviction.

24 II. Analysis

25 A federal prisoner may move to "vacate, set aside or correct" his sentence if it "was 26 imposed in violation of the Constitution." 28 U.S.C. § 2255(a). When a petitioner seeks relief 27 pursuant to a right recognized by a United States Supreme Court decision, a one-year statute of 28 limitations for seeking habeas relief runs from "the date on which the right asserted was initially

1 recognized by the Supreme Court.” 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f)(3). The petitioner bears the burden of 2 demonstrating that his petition is timely and that he is entitled to relief.

3 In Johnson, the United States Supreme Court held that the residual clause in the 4 definition of a “violent felony” in the Armed Career Criminal Act of 1984, 18 U.S.C. §
5 924(e)(2)(B) (“ACCA”), is unconstitutionally vague. 135 S. Ct. at 2557. The ACCA defines 6 “violent felony” as any crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year, that:
7 (i) has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the 8 person of another; or (ii) is burglary, arson, or extortion, involves use of explosives, or otherwise
9 involves conduct that presents a serious potential risk of physical injury to another. 18 U.S.C. §
10 924(e)(2)(B). Subsection (ii) above is known as the ACCA's “residual clause.” Johnson, 135 S.
11 Ct. at 2555-56. The Supreme Court held that “increasing a defendant's sentence under the clause 12 denies due process of law.” Id. at 2557.

13 Jones was not, however, sentenced pursuant to ACCA. Rather, he was convicted of 14 violating 18 U.S.C. § 924(c) for carrying and use of a firearm during and in relation to a crime of 15 violence. Section 924(c)(3) provides:

16 the term “crime of violence” means an offense that is a felony and—

17 (A) has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of 18 physical force against the person or property of another, or

19 (B) that by its nature, involves a substantial risk that physical force 20 against the person or property of another may be used in the course of committing the offense.

21 As with the ACCA, subsection (A) is referred to as the force or elements clause while subsection 22 (B) is referenced as the residual clause. Jones argues that Johnson is equally applicable to § 23 924(c) cases and that his instant motion is timely as it was filed within one year of Johnson. The 24 Ninth Circuit, however, subsequently held to the contrary. When Jones filed his present motion, 25 “[t]he Supreme Court [had] not recognized that § 924(c)'s residual clause is void for vagueness 26 in violation of the Fifth Amendment.” United States v. Blackstone, 903 F.3d 1020, 1028 (9th Cir.
27 2018). As indicated by the Ninth Circuit, “[t]he Supreme Court may hold in the future that 28 Johnson extends to sentences imposed ... pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 924(c), but until then

1 [defendant's] motion is untimely.” Id. Accordingly, Jones's motion was premature when it was 2 filed.

3 The Supreme Court has, however, subsequently applied the principles first outlined in 4 Johnson to the residual clause of § 924(c), holding “that § 924(c)(3)(B) is unconstitutionally
5 vague.” Davis, 139 S. Ct. at 2336. Accordingly, while Jones's motion was premature when it was 6 filed, the Court will now consider the motion as timely given the Supreme Court's decision in 7 Davis, extending the principles of Johnson to § 924(c), and will treat the motion as if filed
8 seeking relief pursuant to Davis.

9 A. Hobbs Act Robbery

10 Jones asserts that his conviction is not subject to the provisions of § 924(c)(3) because the 11 crime (Hobbs Act Robbery) underlying his 924(c) conviction does not constitute a “crime of 12 violence.” He argues that his § 924(c) conviction and sentence is unconstitutional under Davis 13 because a Hobbs Act Robbery cannot constitute a crime of violence without relying on the 14 unconstitutional residual clause. The court disagrees.

15 Jones argues that a Hobbs Act Robbery cannot categorically fall under the force or 16 elements clause of § 924(c)(3)(A) because a Hobbs Act Robbery can be committed by any 17 amount of force necessary to accomplish the taking, it does not necessarily require the use of 18 violent force. Prior to the Supreme Court's holding in Davis, the Ninth Circuit held that Hobbs
19 Act “[r]obbery indisputably qualifies as a crime of violence” under § 924(c). United States v.
20 Mendez, 992 F.2d 1488, 1491 (9th Cir. 1993). In 2016, the Ninth Circuit was confronted with 21 essentially the same argument that Jones raises here, that “because Hobbs Act Robbery may also 22 be accomplished by putting someone in ‘fear of injury,’ 18 U.S.C. § 1951(b), it does not 23 necessarily involve ‘the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force,’ 18 U.S.C. §
24 924(c)(3)(A).” United States v. Howard, 650 Fed App'x. 466, 468 (9th Cir. 2016). The Ninth 25 Circuit held that Hobbs Act Robbery nonetheless qualified as a crime of violence under the force 26 clause:

27 [Petitioner's] arguments are unpersuasive and are foreclosed by 28 United States v. Selfa, 918 F.2d 749 (9th Cir. 1990). In Selfa, we held that the analogous federal bank robbery statute, which may be violated by “force and violence, or by intimidation,” 18 U.S.C. §

1 2113(a) (emphasis added), qualifies as a crime of violence under 2 U.S.S.G. § 4B1.2, which uses the nearly identical definition of 3 “crime of violence” as § 924(c). Selfa, 918 F.2d at 751. We 4 explained that “intimidation” means willfully “to take, or attempt to 5 take, in such a way that would put an ordinary, reasonable person in 6 fear of bodily harm,” which satisfies the requirement of a
7 “threatened use of physical force” under § 4B1.2. Id. (quoting
8 United States v. Hopkins, 703 F.2d 1102, 1103 (9th Cir. 1983)).
9 Because bank robbery by “intimidation”—which is defined as 10 instilling fear of injury—qualifies as a crime of violence, Hobbs Act 11 robbery by means of “fear of injury” also qualifies as [a] crime of 12 violence.

13 Id.

14 The Court holds that a Hobbs Act Robbery constitutes a crime of violence under § 15 924(c)(3)'s force clause. Under the elements set forth in the language of § 1951, Jones's 16 underlying felony offense (Hobbs Act Robbery) is a “crime of violence” because the offense has,
17 “as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person or 18 property of another.” 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(A); see also United States v. Jay, 705 F. App'x 587
19 (9th Cir. 2017) (unpublished) (finding Hobbs Act Robbery a crime of violence). Davis is 20 inapplicable here because Jones's conviction and sentence do not rest on the residual clause of § 21 924(c). The Court sees no reason to depart from the well-reasoned cases of nine other circuit
22 courts of appeals that have found Hobbs Act Robbery to be a crime of violence after Johnson.
23 See United States v. Garcia-Ortiz, 904 F.3d 102, 106 (1st Cir. 2018); United States v. Hill, 890
24 F.3d 51, 60 (2d Cir. 2018); United States v. Mathis, 932 F.3d 242, 265-67 (4th Cir. 2019);
25 United States v. Buck, 847 F.3d 267, 274–75 (5th Cir. 2017); United States v. Gooch, 850 F.3d
26 285, 292 (6th Cir. 2017); United States v. Fox, 878 F.3d 574, 579 (7th Cir. 2017); United States
27 v. Jones, 919 F.3d 1064, 1072 (8th Cir. 2019); United States v. Melgar-Cabrera, 892 F.3d 1053, 28 1064-6 (10th Cir. 2018); In re Pollard, 931 F.3d 1318 (11th Cir. 2019).

29 As the Supreme Court found in Stokeling v. United States, 139 S. Ct. 544, 553 (2019), 30 “Robbery . . . has always been within the category of violent, active crimes” that merit enhanced 31 penalties under statutes like 924(c). As stated by the Supreme Court “Congress made clear that 32 the ‘force’ required for common-law robbery would be sufficient to justify an enhanced 33 sentence.” Id. at 551. Like the statute in Florida, Hobbs Act Robbery is “defined as common-law

1 robbery.” United States v. Melgar-Cabrera, 892 F.3d 1053, 1064. Section 924(c) includes crimes
2 that involve “physical force.” 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(A). Stokeling forecloses Petitioner’s
3 argument that the “force” required for Hobbs Act Robbery does not meet the standard set by 18
4 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(A).

5 This reasoning follows through to Defendant’s last gasp argument. Defendant argues in 6 his supplemental brief (for the first time) that Hobbs Act Robbery fails to constitute a crime of 7 violence under the elements clause because it does not categorically require the use of intentional
8 force against the person or property of another, but instead, can be committed by causing fear of 9 future injury to property, tangible or intangible. However, “[a] defendant cannot put a reasonable 10 person in fear” of injury to their person or property without “threatening to use force.” United 11 States v. Gutierrez, 876 F.3d 1254, 1257 (9th Cir. 2017). “[Robbery] by intimidation thus 12 requires at least an implicit threat to use the type of violent physical force necessary” to satisfy
13 the requirements of the elements clause. Id.; see also Estell v. United States, 924 F.3d 1291, 1293
14 (8th Cir. 2019) (bank robbery by intimidation requires threatened use of force causing bodily 15 harm). Like the court in Mathis, this Court sees no reason to discern any basis in the text of 16 elements clause for creating a distinction between threats of injury to tangible and intangible
17 property for the purposes of defining a crime of violence. 932 F.3d at 266. Therefore, Hobbs Act
18 Robbery constitutes a crime of violence under the elements clause of Section 924(c).

19 III. Certificate of Appealability

20 To appeal this order, Jones must receive a certificate of appealability. 28 U.S.C. § 21 2253(c)(1)(B); Fed. R. App. P. 22(b)(1); 9th Cir. R. 22–1 (a). To obtain that certificate, he “must 22 make a substantial showing of the denial of a constitutional right, a demonstration that ...
23 includes showing that reasonable jurists could debate whether (or, for that matter, agree that) the 24 petition should have been resolved in a different manner or that the issues presented were 25 adequate to deserve encouragement to proceed further.” Slack v. McDaniel, 529 U.S. 473, 483–
26 84 (2000) (quotation omitted). This standard is “lenient.” Hayward v. Marshall, 603 F.3d 546, 27 553 (9th Cir. 2010) (en banc).

28 Given contrary holdings in other district courts in the Ninth Circuit, the Court cannot

1 deny that other reasonable jurists would find it debatable that the Court's determination that 2 Hobbs Act Robbery is a crime of violence pursuant to the force clause of § 924(c) is wrong. See 3 United States v. Chea, No. 4:98-cr-40003-CW, 2019 WL 5061085 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 2, 2019);
4 United States v. Dominguez, No. 14-10268 (9th Cir. argued Dec. 10, 2019). Accordingly, the 5 court grants Defendant a certificate of appealability.

6 IV. Conclusion

7 Accordingly, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Petitioner Leonard Jones's Motion to 8 Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct Sentence under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 (#42/44/64) is DENIED;

9 IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Clerk of the Court enter JUDGMENT for 10 Respondent and against Petitioner in the corresponding civil action, 2:16-cv-01396-KJD, and 11 close that case,

12 IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Petitioner is GRANTED a Certificate of 13 Appealability.

14 DATED this 31st day of March 2020.

15
16

17 Kent J. Dawson
18 United States District Judge
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28